

The EXERCISES of the CHIEN SAVANT;

O R,

Learn'd French D O G:

Which is now to be seen at Mr Hally's Watch-Maker, facing the Canon Tavern, Charing-Cross, within two Doors of the Curious PANOPTICON.

The Title given to this extraordinary Dog, 'tis presum'd, is attributed to it with the more Justice, as he has gain'd the Approbation of Kings, Princes, Princesses, and several Potentates, both here and abroad; and likewise great Numbers of the most learned Persons of the Academies of Paris, the Royal Society, &c. And the Proprietor, who flatters himself that he has hitherto given no less Satisfaction to the Curious in this great Metropolis, humbly hopes they will continue to honour him with their Presence.

This entertaining and sagacious Animal, does, by ranging Typographical Cards (in the Manner that a Printer composes) Read, Write, and cast Accompts; and, by the same Method, answers all the various Questions (in Ovid's Metamorphoses; Geography; the Roman, French, English, and Sacred History) herein contain'd; reckons the Number of Persons present, if not above thirty; sets down any Sirname, or Capital Name, which is not too difficult to spell; solves small Questions in the four Rules of Arithmetick; tells, by looking on any common Watch of the Company, what Hour it is, in a Manner quite particular and agreeable; distinguishes all the different Current English Coins; and shews the Colour of any Person's Cloaths, by bringing the very Colour which most nearly resembles it: With several other amusing and extraordinary Performances.

* * He is to be seen by any Number of Persons, without Loss of Time, from Ten in the Morning, 'till Six in the Evening, at Two Shillings and Six-pence each; and after that Hour he waits on any Persons of Quality, at their Houses, for Two Guineas.
